

Dydd Mawrth 21 Mai

Nervously, Sky and Badger hopped breathlessly as they entered the SuperMarket doors. Startled, they both looked up in surprise and wonder at what they thought was a monster swallowing humans however, this was a SuperMarket. How would they ever find Charlie in this tower?

As they both were positioned in front of the speedy revolving doors which was guarded by a fox. The doors spun like a hurricane the wind hit them like Jack Frost, their wonder grew powerful. They simply had to get through however, they had no notion how to solve this impossible target. In an instant Charlie saw his friendly foe. A carrot. Would he chase it or not?

With one movement the fox threw the carrot in the revolving doors, Sky and Badger were being spun around chasing the carrot; it wasn't long before they rolled out into the SuperMarket. They looked around in wonder and saw a moving table with crusty pie weapons and lots more, it was like food heaven. They walked around dogging trolleys and calling Charlie. Would they ever find him?

All of a sudden Sky and Badger saw packets of fruit and vegetables moving towards them. As they walked passed they saw Charlie. Immediately, there was nothing left except packets. He just sat there as still as a box on a shelf. Pulse pounding wildly. Body shaking madly. Wait look...

Sky and Badger hid under a box. After a while a little girl spotted Charlie. She tried to take him back. All of a sudden he jumped off her arms as quick as lightning. They all ran out the back of the SuperMarket and disguised themselves. Immediately, they hopped to the revolving doors and their owners came and took them home.

Instantly the damaged Charlie filled with sorrow after putting his families lives at risk. He burst in to tears as he apologised with sadness in his compressed heart. Sky and Badger didn't know if he was being honest or not. They thought it wouldn't be the last time he would do something so stupid.
